

Portfolio Shift Commentary: May 7, 2015

It is no surprise that US economic growth stalled in the first three months of the year against the backdrop of a strengthening US Dollar, a collapse in oil prices and a tough winter. We believe that the slowdown is temporary, similar to last year where 1Q14 GDP was revised to negative growth, but then the economy rebounded throughout the rest of the year. We expect the US to reaccelerate in the second quarter back to a 2.5% - 3.0% growth range. While broad quantitative easing among major central banks continues to provide a favorable backdrop for risk assets, particularly equities, we do expect higher volatility due to this policy dependence.

Within fixed income, we expect long-term US rates to remain contained by low inflation and strong overseas demand for US Treasuries. We feel comfortable modestly increasing our credit exposure as we believe any upward pressure to rates will be driven by strong economic data, which should be positive for credit spreads.

As always, we thank you all for your continued support and look forward to discussing any or all of our thoughts at your convenience.

Best Regards,

Teresa Finney, AIF®
Senior Vice President, Investments

This information is general in nature, is not a complete statement of all information necessary for making an investment decision, and is not a recommendation or a solicitation to buy or sell any security. Views expressed are the current opinion of the author, but not necessarily those of Raymond James and are subject to change without notice. Past performance is not indicative of future results. There is no assurance these trends will continue or that forecasts mentioned will occur. US government bonds and treasury bills are guaranteed by the US government and, if held to maturity, offer a fixed rate of return and guaranteed principal value. US government bonds are issued and guaranteed as to the timely payment of principal and interest by the federal government. Treasury bills are certificates reflecting short-term (less than one year) obligations of the US government. Investing always involves risk and you may incur a profit or loss. No investment strategy can guarantee success. Raymond James & Associates, Inc., Member New York Stock Exchange/SIPC.